

Last chance for free PMAV assistance

Media release: 20 March 2012

AgForce is urging landholders to take advantage of free vegetation management assistance to lock in a Property Map of Assessable Vegetation (PMAV) or change incorrect vegetation maps before the project finishes in June.

AgForce Projects manager Sue Dillon said funding for the vegetation management project will be coming to an end after seven years of providing vital assistance to landholders besieged by state vegetation legislation.

AgForce Projects is hosting free vegetation management workshops in Longreach on 2 April and Muttaborra 4 April.

“Landholders should come along to a workshop to help them guarantee long term security over management of vegetation on their property,” Ms Dillon said.

“For producers out there who still don’t have a PMAV or have not seen their vegetation maps, we encourage you to take advantage of the free assistance available from our vegetation management team to lock in a PMAV now.”

A PMAV gives producers greater control over the activities they can and can’t do on their property by securing cleared land or disputing incorrectly mapped areas.

All attendees will be given copies of their most up-to-date Regional Ecosystem (RE) and Regrowth Maps and taken through the options available for managing native vegetation.

These workshops are delivered free to all producers through AgForward, an initiative of AgForce within its project division, funded by the Queensland Government.

To register or for further dates and locations of AgForce Projects workshops or information sessions visit www.agforceprojects.org.au. (07) 3238 6048.

For comment call Sue Dillon on (07) 3236 3100 or 0417 760 481

Media contact: AgForce Projects communications officer Madeline Cooper (07) 3238 6060 or 0488 002 091